

CJIB Leeuwarden

by Benny Bottema - Friday, July 01, 2011

http://www.bennybottema.com/cv_portfolio/cjib/

CJIB was a milestone project for me personally, because I was there from the conception as a Proof Of Concept project to the enterprise level project it became all the way into production.

It was the first project where I got to act more as architect rather than just developer. From Quintor's perspective, my employer at the time, the 'official' architects and the rest of us four or five developers at the early stage were treated equal; we all had the same discussions, shared decisions and POC's to test requirements and feasibility.

After the project scaled up, I became team-lead and architecture specialist of one of the four project teams and coached new developers coming on the project.

resume details for my position with CJIB Leeuwarden